Holden Village works hard to provide a healthy place for you to come and experience life as a Villager.

We have plans and practices in place for minimizing illnesses and infections in the Village. However, in light of coronavirus (COVID-19), which has appeared in Washington State, the Village is reviewing our preparedness for keeping the virus out of the village or containing the spread of the virus should it be introduced to the Village. We are taking precautions as recommended by health authorities.

Due to the isolated wilderness environment of Holden Village and our limited onsite medical resources, we always take preventative actions against the spread of infection in the Village with frequent hand washing, disinfectant cleaning in public spaces and private rooms, isolating those who are ill, and practicing everyday hygiene. We also ask our guests and staff not to come into the Village if they are sick, but now more than ever, we want to stress that it’s critical for you not to come to the Village if you fit any of the following categories:

- You have had exposure to someone known to have coronavirus (COVID-19)
- You have a respiratory illness
- You have a fever
- You have a chronic condition that compromises your immune system

If you are unable to visit Holden in the next few weeks, and you have a current reservation, please contact Registration, registrar@holdenvillage.org. We will cancel your reservation and will either rebook your visit for a later time, or provide you with a refund.

Holden Village will continue to monitor the status of coronavirus and respond as necessary as the situation evolves in Washington State and throughout the world.

For more information, please see:
Washington State Department of Health: https://www.doh.wa.gov/Emergencies/Coronavirus